FTC STRATEGY 2026–2030

Ending the era of secrecy

A strategic response to the global economic and financial crisis.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This strategy development process has been led by the FTC secretariat under the supervision of the Executive Director, Matti Kohonen. It was supported by Marianna Leite, from Righting Society Sàrl.

We are deeply grateful for the wisdom shared during the internal and external consultations, as well as the bilateral consultations around FTC's 2026–2030 Strategy. In particular, we are grateful for the guidance from the members of FTC's Coordination Committee: Asian Peoples' Movement on Debt and Development, Christian Aid, Eurodad, CEFILAT, Transparency International, Global Financial Integrity, LATINDADD, Pan African Lawyers Union (PALU), Tax Justice Network and Tax Justice Network Africa.

We would also like to thank longstanding and new allies for their suggestions, including the Center for Economic and Social Rights, End Austerity Campaign, UN OHCHR, Critical Takes, New Economics Foundation, Open Ownership, TIERRA – Transformations in Economies for Rights and Resources Alliance, TAI, UNOHC, University of Nairobi, Committee on Fiscal Studies, Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), House of Fiscal Wisdom, Righs Initiative, Equidad de Género: Ciudadanía, Trabajo y Familia, Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International and the University of Helsinki.

This strategy development process was coordinated and facilitated with the strategic advice and support of Righting Society.

ABOUT THE FTC

Founded in 2009, the Financial Transparency Coalition (FTC) is a coalition of 11 organisations across different continents who work to promote transparency in illicit financial flows and taxation, and to work towards a financial system that works for all in enabling the realisation of human rights, environmental justice and gender justice. More information is available at financialtransparency.org.

The FTC secretariat is hosted by LATINDADD.

01 FOREWORD

A strategic response to the global economic and financial crisis

The global financial and economic system has both a crisis of austerity and rising wealth and income inequality, coupled with an ecological breakdown due to the illicit overexploitation of fisheries, forestry, minerals and land, the overconsumption of natural resources, and working conditions in which forced labour is all too commonplace.

Add to this rising conflict and human rights and environmental abuses: we have seen power and resources being abused for military gains, as dark financing erodes democratic institutions, with economic and financial systems not designed to halt illicit financial flows.

Global South countries are disproportionately impacted by this economic and financial crisis, militarisation and erosion of institutions, in particular women, girls and marginalised communities, at whose expense the wealthy and powerful can cause wars, ecological destruction and rampant inequality for the rest.

These dynamics are not gender-neutral. Women and girls disproportionately absorb the impacts of fiscal austerity, cuts to public services and underinvestment in care systems. Likewise, climate and environmental crises disproportionately affect communities with the least economic and political power. Financial secrecy reinforces these inequalities by limiting public accountability and constraining the mobilisation of resources needed for transformative responses.

This strategy presents an updated set of policy asks, the ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency, which we also call a Global Charter for Financial Transparency. We call on all States, regional bodies and international bodies to adopt it, and on civil society, academia and other stakeholders to promote it. It updates our earlier policy and advocacy agenda, the ABC of Financial Transparency, which in many places is advancing but often lacks public access to ownership and tax data.

intertwined crises in focus: care and social security; illicit fisheries, forestry and critical mineral mining; and multilateralism

IN THIS CHAPTER

Why public financial transparency is a precondition for tax, climate and gender justice.

Public access is not an add-on or a side product of administrative access to data on the assets that make up wealth and generate high incomes, to the tax data of large companies that lays out their tax payments, or to the beneficial owners of all companies and legal vehicles. Public access is essential to ensure that civil society, journalists and academia can do their work of analysing tax trends and ownership structures, and to hold States, companies and wealthy individuals accountable for their actions. Without public scrutiny, there will be no end to illicit financial flows.

Without public scrutiny, there will be no end to illicit financial flows.

There are many uses of public financial transparency, and in this strategic period we look particularly at three intertwined crises: firstly, the crisis of care and the lack of social security, which should be funded by taxing wealth, corporations, extractive industries and high incomes; secondly, the crisis of illicit fisheries, forestry and critical mineral mining that threatens ecosystems, harms efforts to tackle climate change and causes human rights violations; and thirdly, the crisis of multilateralism, where oligarchic and ultra-wealthy interests are buying elected representatives to erode international co-operation and democracy.

The overarching goal of FTC's 2026–2030 strategy is, firstly, to analyse the findings and uses of financial transparency and the exposure of financial secrecy, and to make them more accessible to everyone; and secondly, to mobilise in a cross-movement strategy that uses this data, these findings and this knowledge to build people power through collective knowledge-building, to challenge austerity, the concentration of power, environmental crises and human rights violations.

We look forward to working with our members, partners and allies to end the era of secrecy once and for all, and to use transparency and public knowledge of the inner workings of the global economic and financial system to put an end to some of the greatest challenges of our time.

Matti Kohonen
Executive Director

02 CONTEXT

The context we're in

We live in an era of rising inequality of wealth and income, rising gender inequality and marginalisation of minority groups, and in a global economy geared towards wealth extraction from Global South countries and hugely accelerated wealth accumulation by Global North elites and large corporations.

Conflicts, illegal wars and invasions among major powers are being committed, and their perpetrators continue to exercise power with impunity, contributing to the growing crisis of multilateralism and the lack of a human rights-based international political and economic order.

We have still not recovered from previous shocks such as the COVID-19 pandemic, during which countries became further indebted, and a global debt crisis that has only got worse. Rising military spending is putting a strain on public expenditure in other areas. Pandemic-era recovery policies were often poorly targeted and lacked transparency, helping larger companies more than households, and failing to check the beneficial owners behind public procurement contracts or financing in the COVID-19 period. As we evidenced during this period, the recovery policies only led to deepening inequality in most countries.

We also live in an era of climate and ecosystem breakdown, where rapid climate change is accelerated by the opacity of company structures in critical industries such as fisheries, forestry, mining, and oil and gas. These industries are also not contributing their fair share of taxes or surtaxes to account for their harmful behaviour and to pay for the energy and industrial transformation needed to end the era of fossil fuel-run economies and energy systems. The transition towards low-carbon and climate-resilient economies also requires transparency in climate-related financial flows, public subsidies, ownership structures and investments in the energy and extractive sectors.

We cannot build a more democratic and rights-based system without knowing who owns what and where.

Yet the major shifts that we require today depend on mobilising resources, and on halting the illicit flow of resources into harmful and illegal activities that violate ecological goals and human rights. This is where our renewed commitment to promoting the Global Charter for Financial Transparency becomes an important step towards solving these interlinked crises, as transparency can unlock the means to implement more ambitious policies to tackle these crises, stop harmful activities and stem the bleeding of resources from where they are needed most.

Oligarchy is threatening multilateralism and democratic political decision-making. The current system of oligarchy is characterised by economies dominated by small groups of super-wealthy people and large corporations, who have captured political systems: in Global North countries, where economic governance legislation is passed largely in their favour and without the meaningful input of Global South countries; and in Global South countries, where elite networks and the super-wealthy often dominate political systems and decisions, and assist wealth extraction.

The demands for change come from civil society, journalists and social movements, who face difficulty in mobilising because of anti-demonstration laws, the lack of freedom of speech and of the press, and corporate courts that silence NGOs calling out the responsibility of companies and wealthy individuals.

Yet their voice and agency are being taken away by States and large companies, with the help of enablers in the legal, banking, accounting and other professions doing their best to hide wealth, and to shift and hide corporate profits in tax havens and secrecy jurisdictions.

We cannot build a more democratic and rights-based international economic and political system without knowing who owns what and where, and what taxes (if any) corporations and ultra-rich people are paying. This is why we need public reporting. Our strategy helps to highlight the need for this, and to make it happen.

WHY PUBLIC REPORTING

Knowing what taxes, if any, corporations and the ultra-rich are paying is the basis for accountability.

03 GLOBAL CHARTER

Building a Global Charter for Financial Transparency

Financial secrecy is a structural driver of inequality, tax abuse, environmental destruction, corruption and democratic erosion. It allows wealth, assets and corporate activities to remain hidden from public scrutiny, reducing the capacity of States to mobilise resources for public services, social protection, care systems and climate action.

The impacts are particularly severe in Global South countries, where illicit financial flows and tax abuses undermine sustainable development and human rights. This Charter is a statement of key policy proposals to end financial secrecy.

A

Automatic exchange of information (AEOI)

Automatic exchange of information for tax purposes, as the key to ending offshore secrecy of wealth held in other countries and jurisdictions, including in secrecy jurisdictions.

Beneficial owners

We need public registries of beneficial owners to allow for the taxation of wealth in all its forms, and to end the impunity of people behind human rights violations, environmental crimes, illicit financial flows and tax abuses.

C

Country-by-country reporting

We need public country-by-country reporting to enable the collection of corporate taxes and to move eventually to a system of unitary taxation, where each company is taxed as a single entity and taxing rights are distributed equitably. This is particularly relevant to the ongoing negotiations, protocols and implementation underway at the United Nations Framework Convention on International Tax Cooperation (UNTC), and to the implementation of the Compromiso de Sevilla, the outcome document of the Fourth International Conference on Financing for Development.

Data access and protection of whistleblowers

Ensuring that corporate and asset data, including annual accounts, other company filings, subsidiary accounts, tax incentives, other subsidies that companies receive, court records related to companies, fines and sanctions, are all publicly accessible. We also need strong protection for whistleblowers, individuals who expose illicit, unethical or unsafe practices, as in the Panama Papers, LuxLeaks and SwissLeaks.

Enabler professionals

Regulation to guarantee the public disclosure of tax advice schemes, and the automatic exchange of tax advice schemes across borders in more detail. Ensuring that money laundering laws cover a wide set of assets and include a comprehensive list of professionals, so as to bring all enabler professionals under public regulation and public registries of enablers. Sanctions and fines imposed on companies, their beneficial owners and professionals should also be publicly accessible.

F

Finance industry transparency

We need to know the legal and beneficial owners of companies and legal entities owned privately or through different types of investment, including private equity, private credit, hedge funds, non-bank lenders, insurance wrappers, real estate investment trusts and public-private partnership contracts. These companies and assets are present in sectors ranging from housing, care homes and nurseries to public transport and other infrastructure contracts.

G

Global Asset Registry (GAR)

Global rules to declare both the legal and beneficial owners of key high-value and high-risk assets, including vessels, vehicles, aeroplanes, real estate, land, precious metals, art, antiquities, forestry, fishing and mining rights, and digital assets. Assets should be registered in national and international registries that are interconnected globally and that allow public access above a certain threshold of size and risk. A Global Asset Registry should support the effective taxation of wealth, help recover assets linked to corruption and illicit financial flows, and strengthen accountability.

We will promote this Global Charter for Financial Transparency at international fora and multilateral negotiations where States can make a difference in advancing all or any of these change proposals. We will monitor the implementation of these reforms at the political level, and their impact through specific use cases where financial transparency is already making a difference. All of these proposals are attainable in the coming years, and the processes that can implement them are already under way and being negotiated.

04 BUILDING KNOWLEDGE

Building knowledge to build people's power

We cannot promote the above-mentioned changes alone. System change requires a cross-movement approach, in which the role of the FTC and its members is to bring the vision of financial transparency to the discussions on the key topics that other movements are tackling, to work together to apply the lens of financial transparency to their work, and vice versa.

This will be done in three ways:

i Producing knowledge that documents and exposes tax abuses and illicit financial flows, and how secrecy is being used to undermine the enabling space for the realisation of human rights, and to enable environmental crimes.

ii Sharing knowledge, building the capacity of others, and elevating knowledge from other networks, coalitions, campaigns and social movements to enhance our joint work on progressive financial transparency.

iii Engaging in advocacy in global spaces, and enabling the advocacy of our members and allies in regional and national spaces to ensure accountability at all levels.

Transparency is not a silver bullet in itself: it needs to be used to bring about policy shifts in diverse fields, from financing public services to ending the illicit exploitation of minerals, forests, land and oceans. At a more normative level, greater transparency makes it possible to build a human rights-based economy.

countries, primarily in the Global South, where our members provide policy advice

THREE PROJECTS

People's Fiscal Monitor; Financial Secrets of Natural Resources; Human Rights-Based Global Economy.

In the years 2026–2030, we will work specifically on three policy and advocacy projects, which link to the core financial transparency demands of the ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency and to the wider aims of the Charter. Each project will aim both to monitor global governance bodies and institutions, and to provide policy advice through our network of members in 10 to 15 countries, focusing primarily on the Global South.

Transparency is not a silver bullet in itself: it needs to be used to bring about policy shifts.

People's Fiscal Monitor

Monitoring how financial transparency enables the taxation of wealth, high incomes, large corporations and extractive industries to finance care systems and social protection in the Global South, and connecting with like-minded groups in the Global North to align monitoring and evidence-building.

Financial Secrets of Natural Resources

Monitoring natural resources, forced labour and extractive industry-related IFFs in fisheries, forestry, mining and commercial agriculture, and building the case for public disclosure of the beneficial ownership and assets linked to natural resources and extractive industries.

Human Rights-Based Global Economy

Monitoring global economic policy and governance debates from a rights-based economy perspective, to build a basis for advocating alternative economic and financial policies driven not by profit, wealth, growth or extractivism, but by a human rights-aligned vision of the economy.

05 MOVEMENTS

Working across movements

Our work also links to building stronger movements for change that are not limited to FTC's membership. Through participation in the work of social movements, civil society groups, trade unions and other civil society actors, we will be able to build people power based on knowledge of who owns what, how wealth accumulates, how companies are structured and how global financial flows operate.

Anti-austerity movements that demand an end to International Financial Institutions (IFIs) like the World Bank and the IMF pushing for austerity policies, and that address alternatives for financing public services through progressive taxation.

Environmental justice and anti-extractive movements that wish to see an end to illicit fisheries, forestry and mining, which requires full disclosure of ownership structures to end the illicit financial flows linked to unlawful extraction and tax abuses in these sectors, to hold those responsible accountable and to end exploitative practices.

New economy movements that seek to shift economic discourse away from neoliberal and growth-based narratives, towards policies beyond GDP and towards rights-based, decolonial, feminist, degrowth and post-extractivist economies.

Feminist movements, women's rights organisations and human rights organisations that demand the right to care and social protection, linking feminist tax reforms and feminist financial reforms to this agenda.

Trade unions of transport workers who work to protect the rights of fishers and other workers in the maritime sector.

06 THEORY OF CHANGE

Our theory of change

1 Global Charter on Financial Transparency

The seven points of the ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency serve as a set of reforms and a road map against illicit financial flows (IFFs) as a root cause of hidden assets and of corporate profits shifted to tax havens and secrecy jurisdictions, tax abuse by multinational corporations (MNCs) and wealthy individuals, a broken global financial system, the capture of political systems by oligarchs, and human rights abuses and environmental crimes.

2 Relevant to a wide range of actors

FTC successfully makes the change goals of the Global Charter on Financial Transparency relevant for a wide range of actors in social movements, civil society, trade unions and community-based organisations, who recognise it as the way to stop IFFs in terms of the change they want to see, and how it links to their struggles, which often also need other elements of movement-building, transparency and accountability.

3 A package, not a silver bullet

Illicit financial flows are not just a big number or a 'silver bullet', but a package. A beneficial ownership registry (even a public one), a declaration of assets or tax reporting by large MNCs alone does not achieve adequate change: it needs to be followed by effective policies that build on transparency, such as taxing ultra-wealthy people, sanctioning and stopping companies and beneficial owners behind environmental crimes, or taxing large MNCs as single unitary entities.

4 Distributing power and knowledge

FTC can help distribute power and widen knowledge and methodologies around illicit financial flows. We will build tools and training to interpret publicly available data, share access to often private or secretive databases and methods of analysis, make claims, and build communities of practice around using them for policy change.

5 Windows of opportunity

FTC maps the moments, pressure points and windows of opportunity to bring about effective change, based on relevant and timely analysis of the causes of the unjust economic system, and of how alternatives are implemented, such as progressive fiscal policy based on financial transparency, and ending environmental and human rights crimes and abuses by knowing who owns the companies behind them.

6 A Rights-Based Economy

FTC builds a narrative of an economic system anchored in a feminist, decolonial, anti-racist and anti-fascist political economy that we call a Rights-Based Economy. It is both an umbrella term for analysing the human rights aspects of all alternative proposals, and an alternative in itself, proposing human rights-based economic policies.

7 Sharing findings, building alliances

FTC shares its findings, builds alliances and advocacy agendas, and shows the impact of financial transparency in contributing to ending multiple crises and unbalanced global economic and financial governance systems.

8 Celebrating victories

FTC celebrates our victories, however big or small, both in our own and in related fields, and builds confidence and strength through positive change that we hope will be mutually reinforcing.

07 OUR TRACK RECORD

Building momentum on IFFs and policy change over 15 years

2009

Origins

Founded in 2009 as the Task Force on Financial Integrity and Economic Development, the Task Force played a role in ensuring that illicit financial flows (IFFs) were included in the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, and convened a partnership panel of governments including Norway, France, Germany, Finland, Spain and Chile.

A civil society coalition

In 2013 the FTC became a CSO coalition to push for legislative reforms and to hold governments and companies accountable. It defined its change goals around the ABC of Financial Transparency, inspired by the work of the Tax Justice Network on automatic tax information exchange and public country-by-country reporting; of Global Witness, TJN and GFI on public beneficial ownership transparency; of GFI on ending trade and commercial sources of IFFs; of TI on tackling corruption-related IFFs; and of Global South members on the international institutional architecture.

2013–2017

A South-North coalition

The FTC expanded its membership to become a Global South-led network to end illicit financial flows: LATINDADD and Fundación SES joined from Latin America and the Caribbean; the Pan African Lawyers Union (PALU) and Tax Justice Network Africa from Africa; APMDD and CBGA from Asia; and Eurodad and Christian Aid from Europe.

REGION

Latin America and the Caribbean

LATINDADD has focused on building progressive tax systems that finance public services, through research, policy and advocacy work, and by convening meetings with regional tax authorities and parliamentarians. Fundación SES, and CEFILAT from 2026 onwards, have focused on tackling the financial secrecy of beneficial ownership and asset ownership in the region, convening LAC policymakers and financial intelligence units (FIUs) on reforms to introduce beneficial ownership registries and make them publicly accessible.

Africa

Tax Justice Network Africa and PALU, as part of the Stop the Bleeding Campaign, advocate for a wide definition of IFFs that also includes tax avoidance, tax abuse and commercially abusive practices. The FTC seed-funded the Anti-IFF Tracker, which has allowed TJNA to build a partnership with governments to track the commitments made in the landmark 2015 Mbeki Panel Report on IFFs, as well as SDG commitments on tackling IFFs.

Asia

APMDD and CBGA have embedded financial transparency reforms in political discourse and popular campaigning in the region. CBGA has focused on how financial secrecy harms the mobilisation of progressive tax revenues to finance budget expenditure, and APMDD has studied the role of financial transparency in promoting the taxation of wealthy individuals and ending tax abuse by MNCs. APMDD convenes the Asia Finance Summit, which plays a role in addressing IFFs in the region.

Europe

FTC members Eurodad and TI led efforts on the landmark EU Anti-Money Laundering Directive (AMLD), which in 2020 created a precedent for publicly accessible beneficial ownership registries in EU countries. After the 2022 ruling of the Court of Justice of the European Union invalidated public access, they have worked to make the new 'legitimate interest' window as open as possible, while advocating full public access as a long-term goal. Christian Aid and Global Witness played a pivotal role, with other UK civil society actors, in the advocacy for the UK's publicly accessible beneficial ownership registry.

United States

GFI played a key role in advocating for the Corporate Transparency Act (CTA). An FTC-funded report, 'Acres of Money Laundering', was cited in the legislative bill that created the US beneficial ownership registry.

2020–2021

End Austerity Campaign

During the COVID-19 pandemic, the FTC forged alliances by co-creating the End Austerity Campaign (EAC), analysing COVID-19 recovery spending in first 9 and then 21 Global South countries to demonstrate the lack of public funding to respond to the crisis, the austerity policies of the IFIs, and alternatives including taxing wealth and large companies.

2021 →

Fisheries and forced labour

From 2021 onwards, the FTC has worked with fisheries-sector CSOs and trade unions to uncover the companies and beneficial owners behind illegal, unreported and unregulated (IUU) fishing and forced labour on fishing vessels, in a partnership in which the FTC investigates, trains, carries out joint investigations and capacity-building, and builds collective demands.

08 GOVERNANCE

Our governance structure

As we enter this strategic period, the Financial Transparency Coalition has transitioned towards a global coalition hosted by one of our members in the Global South, LATINDADD, based in Peru. The intention is to host most secretariat staff in the Latin America and Caribbean region, while the Executive Director role can be based anywhere in the world on a contractor basis.

The FTC is a membership coalition: each member appoints a representative to the Coordination Committee (CoCom), and two members at a time serve on the Executive Committee (ExCom), which oversees the operations of the global secretariat.

From 2025 onwards, the FTC has started building a board of global scientific advisors drawn from academia and experienced professionals. We aim to expand this board to provide valuable input into each project that the FTC carries out, as well as expert input into our secretariat operations.

In this strategic period the FTC will open up to new members, who can join the Coordination Committee, and to a wider range of organisations identified as allied organisations. Organisations can move between being allied organisations and members serving on the Coordination Committee and its sub-committees.

Our policy demands have been developed with experts in the fields of financial integrity, tax justice, human rights, environmental justice and high-risk sectors such as fisheries, forestry, mining, commercial agriculture and fossil fuels. They are updated with each strategy review, or more frequently if needed.

An organisation can apply to become an allied organisation and, if approved by the Coordination Committee, will be invited to participate in the working groups that the FTC coordinates globally. Organisations can separately apply to join the Coordination Committee, which as a governance body should be regionally and thematically balanced.

The FTC had a small secretariat of 1.5 people at the beginning of 2026, which we hope to expand to no more than 4 full-time equivalent (FTE) staff, creating a hub for knowledge generation, advocacy and movement-building. The secretariat structure is presented below.

09 MEASURING IMPACT

Measuring impact: from inputs to impacts

01
Inputs
Our people, our coalition, our data, systems and resources

- Global coalition, secretariat staff, systems
- Fundraised income
- Quantitative and qualitative data collected

02
Activities
Related to coalition-building, movement-building, research, advocacy and dissemination

- Developing joint positions
- Developing joint research efforts
- Policy- and advocacy-focused events, activities and outputs
- Movement- and field-building efforts
- Research methodologies and coordination
- Research writing
- Fundraising

03
Outputs
Aimed at the wider public, policymakers, governments, civil society, journalists, academics and researchers

- People's Fiscal Monitor
- Financial Secrets of the Forests
- Financial Secrets of Fisheries
- Rights-Based Economy
- Advocacy at the UN Tax Convention
- Advocacy at the UN FfD process
- Advocacy at the World Bank and the IMF
- Webinars and blogs
- Dissemination

04
Outcomes
Our change goals: to advance and monitor the ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency as measurable policy changes

- Automatic tax information exchange
- Public beneficial ownership registries
- Public country-by-country reporting
- Data access and protection of whistleblowers
- Enabler regulation
- Finance industry transparency
- Global Asset Registry

05
Impacts
Use cases of the ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency in thematic fields, topics and sectors

- People's Fiscal Monitor measures how progressive taxation funds care and social protection
- Financial Secrets of Fisheries, Forests and Natural Resources measures the impact of financial secrecy on environmental crimes and human rights abuses
- Rights-Based Economy measures shifts in the Global Financial Architecture (GFA)

10 TIMELINE

Timeline 2026–2030

2026	■ UN Tax Convention: ensure ambitious language on public disclosure of key financial transparency aspects. ■ Recognise illicit fishing and illicit deforestation as environmental crimes, and extractive industries as key sources of illicit financial flows, in the respective frameworks. ■ Build alternatives to austerity in the area of progressive taxation, leading up to the World Bank / IMF Annual Meetings in Bangkok.
2027	■ UN Tax Convention: ensure ambition on illicit financial flows and financial transparency. ■ Collaborate with fisheries- and forestry-related social movements and national organisations to implement public transparency and accountability to combat illicit financial flows and environmental crimes. ■ Collaborate with anti-austerity movements at the IMF / World Bank Spring and Annual Meetings, launch a book on alternatives to austerity, and monitor progressive fiscal policies to finance care and social protection. ■ Work at UNODC to classify illicit fishing and illicit deforestation as environmental crimes, and increase the number of implementing countries.
2028	■ Support the ratification of the UN Tax Convention and its protocols, to ensure that financial transparency, progressive taxation and the definition of illicit financial flows are implemented. ■ Launch a Rights-Based Economy Alliance (RBEA) at IAFFE or another suitable conference. ■ Prepare for the renewal of SDG indicator 16.4.1 on illicit financial flows. ■ Prepare an index ranking enabler professionals and enabler companies.
2029–2030	■ Ratification of the UN Tax Convention and its protocols; participate in the COP. ■ Participate in the UN Beyond SDGs Summit with a focus on SDG 16. ■ Assess progress in this strategic period and build a new strategy.

ABOUT THE FTC

Founded in 2009, the Financial Transparency Coalition (FTC) is a coalition of 11 organisations across different continents who work to promote transparency in illicit financial flows and taxation, and to work towards a financial system that works for all in enabling the realisation of human rights, environmental justice and gender justice.
