ENDING THE ERA OF SECRECY

FINANCIAL TRANSPARENCY COALITION STRATEGY 2026-2030

FINANCIAL TRANSPARENCY COALITION

SEPTEMBER 2026

This strategy development process has been led by the FTC secretariat under the supervision of the Executive Direcotr, Matti Kohonen. It was supported by Marianna Leite, from Righting Society Sarl.

We are deeply grateful for the wisdom shared during the internal and external consultations, as well as bilateral consultations around FTC's 2026-2030 Strategy, in particular we are grateful for the guidance from the members of FTC's Coordination Committee, i.e. Asian People's Movement on Debt and Development, Christian Aid, Eurodad, CEFILAT, Transparency Internacional, Global Financial Integrity, Latindadd, Pan African Lawyers Union (PALU), Tax Justice Network, Tax Justice Network Africa, and EURODAD.

We'd also like to thank for the suggestions provided by longstanding and new allies such as the Center for Economic and Social Rights, End Austerity Campaign, UN OHCHR, Critical Takes, New Economics Foundation, Open Ownership, TIERRA - Transformations in Economies for Rights and Resources Alliance, TAI, UNOHC, University of Nairobi, Committee on Fiscal Studies, Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), House of Fiscal Wisdom, Righs Initiative, Equidad de Genero, Trabajo, Ciudadania, y Familia, Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International, University of Helsinki, and Open Ownership.

This strategy development process was coordinated and facilitated with the strategic advice and support from Righting Society.

Founded in 2009, the Financial Transparency Coalition (FTC) is a coalition of 11 organisations across different continents wo work to promote transparency in illicit financial flows and taxation, and to work towards a financial system that works for all in enabling the realisation of human rights, environmental justice and gender justice. More information about the coalition can be found here on the FTC website, at www.financialtransparency.org

A STRATEGIC RESPONSE TO THE GLOBAL ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL CRISIS

The global financial and economic system has both a crisis of austerity and rising wealth and income inequality, coupled with an ecological breakdown due to illicit overexploitation of fisheries, forestry, minerals, land, and overconsumption of natural resources, and working conditions with forced labour being all too commonplace.

Add to this the rising conflict, human rights and environmental abuses, we have seen power and resources being abused for military gains, as dark financing erodes democratic institutions, with economic and financial systems not designed to halt illicit financial flows.

Global South countries are disproportionately impacted by this economic and financial crisis, militarization, and erosion of institutions, and in particular, women, girls, and marginalised communities, at the expense of whom the wealthy, powerful can cause wars, ecological destruction, and rampant inequality for the rest.

These dynamics are not gender-neutral. Women and girls disproportionately absorb the impacts of fiscal austerity, cuts to public services, and underinvestment in care systems. Likewise, climate and environmental crises disproportionately affect communities with the least economic and political power. Financial secrecy reinforces these inequalities by limiting public accountability and constraining the mobilisation of resources needed for transformative responses.

This strategy presents an updated set of policy asks, the ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency which we also call a Global Charter for Financial Transparency that we call for all States, regional bodies, international bodies to adopt, and for civil society, academia and other stakeholders to promote. It updates our earlier policy and advocacy agenda of the ABC of Financial Transparency, which in many places is advancing, but often lacks public access to ownership and tax data.

Public access is not an add on or a side product of administrative access to data on assets that make up wealth wealth and generate high incomes, tax data of large companies that lays out their tax payments, or beneficial owners of all companeis and legal vehicles. Public access is essential to ensure that civil society, journalists, academia can do their work of analysing tax trends and ownership structures, and to hold States, companies and wealthy individuals accountable for their actions. Without public scrutiny, there will be no end to illicit financial flows.

There are many uses of public financial transparency, and in this strategic period we look particularly three intertwined crises: firstly the crisis of care and lack of social security that should be funded from taxing wealth, corporates, extractive industries and high incomes; secondly the crisis of illicit fisheries, forestry and critical mineral mining that threatens ecosystems, harms efforts to tackle climate change, and causes human rights violations; and thirdly, the crisis of multilateralism, where oligarchic and ultra-wealthy interests are buying elected representatives to erode international co-operation and democracy.

The overarching goal of FTC's 2026-2030 strategy is to firstly analyse and make the findings and uses of financial transparency and exposing financial secrecy more accessible to everyone, and secondly to mobilise in a cross-movement strategy to utilise this data, findings and knowledge to build people power through collective efforts of knowledge building to challenge austerity, concentration of power, environmental crises, and human rights violations.

We look forward to working with our members and partners and our allies to end the era of secrecy for once and for good, and to utilise the transparency and public knowledge of the inner workings of the global economic and financial system to put an end to some of the greatest challenges of our times.

Matti Kohonen, Executive Director

THE CONTEXT WE'RE IN

We live in an era of rising inequality of wealth and income, rising gender inequality and marginalisation of minority groups, and in a global economy that is geared towards wealth extraction from Global South countries, and hugely accelerated wealth accumulation in the Global North elites and large corporations. Conflicts, illegal wars and invasions among major powers are being committed, and their perpetrators can continue to exercise power with impunity, contributing to the growing crisis of multilateralism and lack of a human rights-based international political and economic order.

We have still not recovered from previous shocks such as the COVID-19 pandemic, where countries became further indebted from lending during the period, and a global debt crisis that has only gotten worse. Rising military spending is putting a strain on public expenditures in other areas. The pandemic-era recovery policies were often poorly targeted and lacked transparency, helping larger companies more than households, and not checking the beneficial owners behind public procurement contracts or financing in the COVID-19 period. The recovery policies, as we evidenced during this period, only led to deepening inequality in most countries.

We also live in an era of climate and ecosystem break downs, where rapid climate change is accelerated by opacity of company structures in critical industries such as fisheries, forestry, mining, oil and gas, while these industries are also not contributing their fair share of taxes or surtaxes to account for their harmful behaviour and to pay for the necessary energy and industrial transformation needed for ending the era of fossil fuel run economies and energy systems. The transition towards low-carbon and climate-resilient economies also requires transparency in climate-related financial flows, public subsidies, ownership structures and investments in energy and extractive sectors.

Yet, the major shifts that we require today depend on mobilising resources, and halting the illicit flow of resources in harmful and illegal activities that violate ecological goals and human rights. This is where our renewed commitment to promoting the Global Charter for Financial Transparency becomes an important step towards solving these interlinked crises, as transparency can unlock the means to implement more ambitious policies to tackle these crisis and stop the harmul activities and bleeding of resources from where they are needed the moast.

Oligarchy is threatening multilateralism and democratic political decision making, and the current system of oligarchy is characterised by countries where the economy is dominated by a small groups of super wealthy people and large corporations, who have captured political systems especially both in the Global North countries where economic governance legislation is passed largely in their favour and without the meaningful input of Global South countries, and also in Global South countries where elite networks and the super wealthy often dominate political systems and decisions, and assist wealth extraction.

The demands for change comes from civil society, journalists, social movements, who have a difficulty in mobilising, anti-demonstration laws, and the lack of freedom of speech and press, and corporate courts that silence NGOs calling out the responsibility of companies and wealthy individuals.

Yet, their voice and agency is being taken away by States and large compaies with the help of enablers in legal, banking and accounting and other professions doing their best to hide wealth, shift and hide corporate profits to tax havens and secrecy jurisdictions.

We cannot build a more democratic and rights-based international economic and political system without knowing who owns what and where, and what (if any) taxes corporations and ultra rich people are paying, this is why we need public reporting. Our strategy helps to highlight the need for this, and to make it happen.

BUILDING A GLOBAL CHARTER FOR FINANCIAL TRANSPARENCY

Financial secrecy is a structural driver of inequality, tax abuse, environmental destruction, corruption, and democratic erosion. It allows wealth, assets, and corporate activities to remain hidden from public scrutiny, reducing the capacity of states to mobilise resources for public services, social protection, care systems, and climate action. The impacts are particularly severe in Global South countries, where illicit financial flows and tax abuses undermine sustainable development and human rights. This Charter is a statement of key policy proposals to end financial secrecy.

A - Automatic exchange of information (AEOI) for tax purposes, as the key for ending offshore secrecy of wealth held in other countries and jurisdictions, including in secrecy jurisdictions.

B - Beneficial owners. We need public registries of beneficial owners to allow for the taxation of wealth in all its forms, and to end the impunity of people behind human rights violations, environmental crimes, illicit financial flows, and tax abuses.

C - Country-by-country reporting. We need public country by country reporting to enable the collection of corporate taxes and to move eventually to a system of unitary taxation where each company is taxed as a single entity, distributing taxing rights equitably, in particular in relation to the ongoing negotiations, protocols, and implementation as is underway at the United Nations Framework Convention on International Tax Cooperation (UNTC), and as was also the implementation of the Compromisso de Sevilla, the final outcome document of the 4th International Conference on Financing for Development.

D - Data access and protection of whistleblowers. Ensuring access to corporate and asset data, including annual accounts, other company filings, subsidiary accounts, tax incentives, other subsidies that companies receive, court records related to companies, fines and sanctions are all publicly accessible. In addition, we also need strong protection for whistleblowers who are individuals who expose illicit, unethical, or unsafe practices, such as in cases like Panama Papers, LuxLeaks, SwissLeaks.

E - Enabler professionals. To bring about regulation to guarantee the public disclosure of the tax advice schemes and automatic exchange of tax advice schemes across borders in more detail. Ensuring that money laundering laws cover a wide set of assets and include a comprehensive list of professionals to bring all enabler professionals under public regulation and public registries of enablers. Sanctions and fines made to companies, their beneficial owners, and professionals should also be publicly accessible.

F - Finance industry transparency. We need to know the legal and beneficil owners of companies and legal entities owned privately or through investment of different types, including private equity, private credit, hedge funds, non-bank lenders, insurance wrappers, real-estate investment trusts, public-private partnership contracts. These companies and assets are present in various sectors ranging from housing, care homes, nurseries, public transport and other types of infrastructure contracts.

G - Global Asset Registry (GAR). This ensures global rules to declare both legal and beneficial owners of key high-value and high-risk assets including vessels, vehicles, airplanes, real estate, land, precious metals, art, antiquities, forestry, fishing and mining rights, digital assets, among other assets. Assets should be registered in national and international registries that are interconnected globally, and that allow for public access above a certain threshold of size and risk of the asset. A Global Asset Registry should support the effective taxation of wealth, help recover assets linked to corruption and illicit financial flows, and strengthen accountability.

We will promote this Global Charter for Financial Transparency at international fora and multilateral negotiaations where States can make a difference towards advancing all or any of these change proposals, and we will monitor the implementation of these refroms at the political level, and the impact of these refroms through specific use-cases of where financial transparency is already making a difference. All of these proposals are attainable in the next years and processes that can implement them are already ongoing and being negotiated.

BUILDING KNOWLEDGE TO BUILD PEOPLE'S POWER

We cannot promote the above-mentioned changes alone. System change requires a cross-movement approach, where the role of the FTC and its members is to bring the vision of financial transparency to the discussions that concern the key topics that other movements are tackling, and to work together to apply the lens of financial transparency to their work, and vice versa. This will be done in three ways:

i) Producing knowledge that documents and exposes tax abuses and illicit financial flows, and how secrecy is being used to undermine the enabling space for the realisation of human rights, and environmental crimes;
ii) Sharing knowledge, building the capacity of others, and elevating knowledge from other networks, coalitions, campaigns, and social movements to enhance our joint work on progressive financial transparency;
iii) Engaging in advocacy efforts in global spaces, and enabling advocacy efforts of our members and allies in regional and national spaces to ensure accountability at all levels.

Transparency is not a silver bullet in itself, but it needs to be used to bring about policy shifts that can shift policy debates in diverse fields from financing public services, ending illicit exploitation of minerals, forests, land and oceans. At a more normative level, greater transprency enables to build a human rights-based economy.

In the years 2026-2030, we will specifically work in these three policy and advocacy projects, which link to the core financial transparency demands in terms of the ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency and the wider aims of the Charter.

- People's Fiscal Monitor: monitoring how financial transparency enables taxing wealth, high incomes, large corporations and extractive industries to finance care systems and social protection in the Global South and connecting with like-minded groups in the Global North to align monitoring and evidence building.

- Financial Secrets of Natural Resources: monitoring natural resources, forced labour and extractive industry related IFFs in fisheries, forestry, mining, commercial agriculture and building the case for public disclosure of beneficial ownership and assets linked to natural resources and extractive industries.

- Human Rights-Based Global Economy: we would monitor global economic policy and governance debates from a rights-based economy perspective to build a basis for advocating for alternative economic and financial policies that are not driven by profit, wealth, growth or extractivism, but a human rights aligned vision of the economy.

Each of these projects that build on the Charter, will aim to reach both monitoring of global governance bodies and institutions, while also reach policy advice through our network of members between 10 to 15 countries primarily focusing on Global South countries.

Our work also links to the work of building stronger movements for change that are not limited to FTC's membership, but through participation in the work of social movements, civil society groups, trade unions, and other civil society actors we will be able to build people power based on knowledge of who owns what, how wealth accumulates, how companies are structured, and how global financial flows operate.

- Anti-austerity movements that demand an end to International Financial Institutions (IFIs) like the World Bank and the IMF pushing for austerity policies, and to address alternatives in financing public services through progressive taxation,
- Feminist movements, women's rights organisations, and human rights organisations who demand the right to care and social protection and linking feminist tax reforms and feminist financial reforms to this agenda.
- Environmental justice and anti-extractive movements that wish to see an end to exploitation of illicit fisheries, forestry, and mining that require full disclosure of ownership structures to end illicit financial flows linked to unlawful extraction and tax abuses in these sectors, and to hold them accountable and end exploitation practices and tax abuses;
- Trade unions of transport workers who work to protect fisheres' rights and other workers in the maritme sector
- New economy movements, that seek to shift economic discourses from neoliberal and growth-based discourses to policies beyond GDP, and towards rights-based, decolonial, feminist, and degrowth and post-extractivist economies.

FTC THEORY OF CHANGE

(1) Global Charter on Financial Transparency and the seven points of the The ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency serve as a set of reforms and a road map to Illicit Financial Flows (IFFs) as a root cause of hidden assets and corporate profits shifted in tax havens and secrecy jurisdictins, tax abuse by MNCs and wealthy individuals, broken global financial system, capture of political systems by oligarchs, and human rights abuses and environmental crimes.

(2) FTC successfully makes the Global Charter on Financial Transparency change goals relevant for a wide range of actors in social movements, civil society, trade unions, and community-based organisations who recognise it as the way to stop IFFs in terms of the change they want to see, and how it links to their struggles that often needs also other elements of movement building, transparency, and accountability.

(3) Illicit Financial Flows is not just a big number, or a 'silver bullet,' but a package, i.e., alone a BO registry (even a public one) or declaration of assets, or tax reporting by large MNCs does achieve adequate change, it needs to follow effective policies that build on transparency such as taxing ultra wealthy people, sanctioning and stopping companies and beneficial owners behind environmental crimes, or taxing large MNCs as single unitary entities.

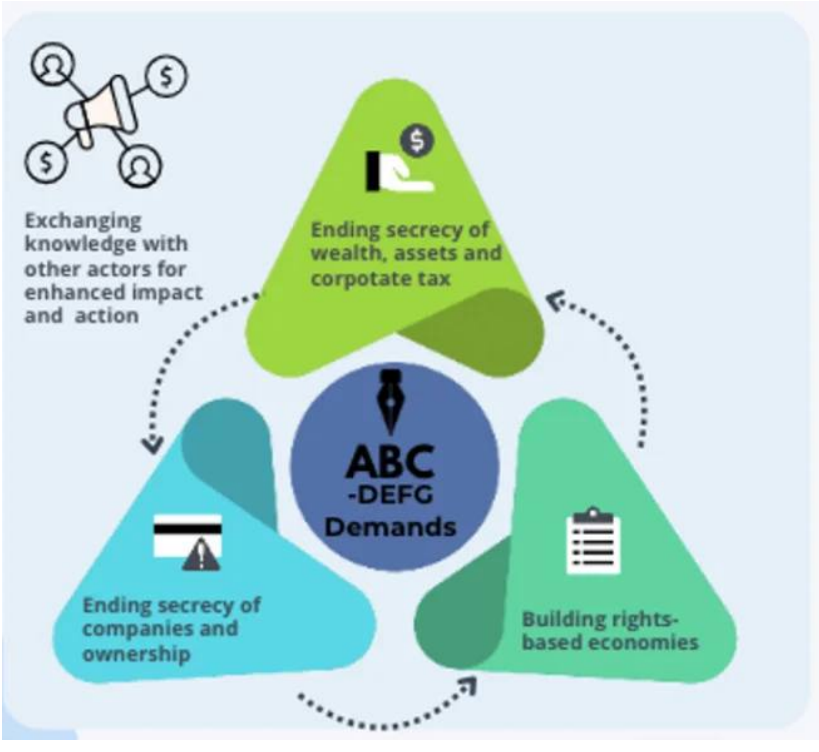

(4) FTC can help distribute power and widen knowledge and methodologies around Illicit Financial Flows. We will build tools and training to interpret publicly available data, share access to often private or secretive databases, methods of analysis, and make claims, and build communities of practice around using them for policy change.

(5) FTC maps the moments, pressure points, and windows of opportunity to bring about effective change based on knowledge and relevant and timely analysis of the causes of the unjust economic system, and how alternatives such as progressive fiscal policy based on financial transparency and ending environmental and human rights crimes and abuses based on knowing who owns the companies behind them are implemented.

(6) FTC builds a narrative of an economic system that is anchored in a feminist, decolonal and anti-racist and anti-fascist political economy that we call a Rights-Based Economy that is both an umbrella term of analysing the human rights aspects all alternative proposals as well as an alternative in itself of proposing human rights based economic policies.

(7) FTC shares its findings, builds alliances, builds advocacy agendas, and shows the impact of financial transparency in contributing to ending multiple crises and unbalanced global economic and financial governance systems.

(8) FTC celebrates our victories (however big or small) and in both our own and other related fields, and builds confidence and strength through positive change that we hope will reinforce one another.

Examples of Building Momentun on IFFs and Policy Change over 15 years

- Founded in 2009 as the Task Force on Financial Integrity and Economic Development, the Task Force played a role in ensuring that Illicit Financial Flows (IFFs) are included as part of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, and convening a partnership panel of governments including Norway, France, Germany, Finland, Spain, and Chile.

- In 2013 FTC became a CSO coalition to push for legislative reforms and to hold governments and companies accountable, defining its change goals around the ABC of Financial Transparency inspired by the Tax Justice Network on automatic tax-related information exchange and public country-by-country reporting, the work of Global Witness, TJN and GFI on public beneficial ownership transparency, and GFI for asks related to ending trade and commercial sources of IFFs, and TI in tackling corruption-related IFFs, and Global South members in addressing the International Institutional Architecture.

- FTC became a South-North coalition with FTC then expanded its membership from 2013 to 2017 to become a Global South led network to end Illicit Financial Flows, with LATINDADD and Fundacion SES joining from Latin America and the Caribbean, with Pan African Lawyers Union (PALU) and Tax Justice Network Africa joining from the African Region, and with APMDD and CBGA joining from Asia, while EURODAD and Christian Aid joined in Europe.

- In Latin America and the Caribbean, LATINDADD has focusing on building progressive tax systems that finance public services through resarch, policy and advocacy work and in convening meetings with regional tax authorities and regional parliamentarians. Fundacion SES, and later on CEFILAT from 2026 onwards, has focused on tackling financial secrecy of beneficial ownership and asset ownership in the region in convening LAC policy makers and financial intelligence units (FIUs) concerning reforms to introduce beneficial ownership registries, and making them publicly accessible.

- in Africa, Tax Justice Network Africa and the Pan African Lawyers Union (PALU), as part of the Stop the Bleeding Campaign in Africa, advocate for a wide definition of IFFs, which includes also tax avoidance and tax abuse, as well as commercially abusive practices. FTC has seed funded the Anti-IFF Tracker, that has allowed for TJNA to build a partnership with governments in tracking the commitments made at the landmark 2015 Mbeki Panel Report to tackle IFFs, and commitments made at the SDGs also on tackling IFFs.

- In Asia, our members APMDD and CBGA have embedded financial transparency reforms in the political discourse and popular campaigning in the region, with CBGA focusing on how financial secrecy harms mobilising progressive tax revenues to finance budget expenditures, and APMDD studying the role that financial transparency plays in promoting taxation of wealthy individuals, and ending tax abuses by MNCs. APMDD has conve ned the Asia Finance Summit that plays a role in addressing Illicit Financial Flows in the region.

- In Europe, FTC members EURODAD, TI led efforts on landmark European Union directives on Anti-Money Laundering Directive (AMLD) which in 2020 created a precedent for publicly accessible beneficial ownership registries in EU countries, which was subsequently overturned in 2022 with the European Court of Justice (ECJ) ruling that invalidated public access to them, they have since then worked to make the newly created 'legitimate interest' window as open as possible, while advocating for full public access as a long term goal. Christian Aid and Global Witness played a pivotal role in doing the advocacy work for the UKs publicly accessible BO registry with other CSO actors in the UK.

- In USA, GFI played a key role in advocating for the Corporate Transparency Act (CTA) where a FTC funded report 'Acres of Money Laundering' was cited in the legislative bill that created the US BO registry at the time.

- During the COVID-19 pandemic, FTC forged alliances by co-creating the End Austerity Campaign (EAC) in analysing the COVID-19 recovery spending in first 9 and then 21 Global South countries to demonstrate the lack of public funding to respond to the crisis, the austerity policies of the IFIs, and how alternatives including taxing wealth and large companies.

- From 2021 onwards, FTC has worked with fisheries sector CSOs and trade unions in uncovering companies and beneficial owners behind Illegal, Unregulated and Unreported (IUU) fishing and forced labour on fishing vessels, in a partnership where FTC works to investigate and also train, do joint investigations and capacity building, and build collective demands.

OUR GOVERNANCE STRUCTURE

As we enter this strategic framework period, the Financial Transparency Coalition has transitioned towards a global coalition hosted by our members in the Global South, LATINDADD, based in Peru. The intention is to host most secretariat staff in the Latin American and Caribbean Region, while the execurtive director role can be based anywhere in the world where the role can be contracted on a contractor basis.

The governance structure of FTC is a membership coalition, where all of its members appoint a representative to the Coordination Committee (CoCom), and where two members at the time serve in the Executive Committee (ExCom) who oversee the operations of the global secretariat.

From 2025 onwards, FTC has started a process of ensuring we have a board of global scientific advisors drawn from academia and experienced professioanls. We aim to expand this board to provide valuable input into each project that FTC carries out, as well as providing expert input also into our secretariat operations.

FTC will in this strategic period open up to new members who can then join the Coordinatin Committee, and also a wider range of new members who are identified as allied organisations. Organisations can also move between being allied organisations and membrs who serve in the Coordination Committee, and its sub committees.

Our policy demands have been developed with experts in the fields of financial integrity, tax justice, human rights, environmental justice and high-risk sectors such as fisheries, forestry, mining, commercial agriculture and fossil fuels, and they are also regularly updated along with each strategy review or more frequently if needed.

An organisation can apply to become an allied organisation, and if approved by the Coordination Committee, they will then be invited to participate in working groups that the FTC coordinates globally. They can separately apply to become part of the coordination committee which as a governance body should be regionally and thematically balanced.

Coordination Committee - Executive Committee
International Secretariat - Allied Organisations
Working Groups - ABC-DEFG of Financial Transparency: Tracking financial secrecy and its enablers
People's Fiscal Monitor: Tracking Progressive Taxation to fund Care and Social Protection
Illicit Financial Flows in Fisheries, Forestry, Critical Minerals
Rebuilding Multilateralism towards a Rights-Based Economy

FTC has a small secretariat of 1.5 people in the beginning of 2026, which we hope to expand to no more than 4 FTE persons to create a hub for building the knowledge generation, advocacy, and movement building. The secretariat strucure is presented below.

Executive Director (100% FTE) - Finance and Operations Officer (50% FTE)
Communications Officer (Vacant)
Media and Investigations Officer (contract based on project funding)
Each working group would have its coordinator hired on a contractual basis

- UN Tax Convention, to ensure ambitious language on public disclosure on key financial transparency aspects
- Recognising illicit fishing, and illicit deforestation as environmental crimes, extractive industries and key sources of illicit financial flows in respective frameworks.
- Build alternatives to austerity leading up to the WB / IMF Annual Meetings in Bangkok in the area of progressive taxation.

- UN Tax Convention, ensure ambition in illicit financial flows and financial transparency
- Collaborate with fisheries and forestry related related social movements and national organisations to implement public transparency and accountability to combat illicit financial flows and environmental crimes
- Collaborate with anti-austerity movements at IMF / WB Spring and Annual Meetings, launch a book on alternatives to austerity, monitor progressive fiscal policies to finance care and social protection
- Work at UNODC to classify illicit fishing and illicit deforestation as an environmental crime, increase number of implementing coutnries

- Support the ratification of the UN Tax Convention and its protocols that would ensure financial transparency, progressive taxtion, and the definition of illicit financial flows are implemented
- Launch of a Rights-Based Economy Alliance (RBEA) at IAFFE or other suitable conference
- Prepare for the renewal of the SDG Goal 164.1. on Illicit Financial Flows
- Prepare an index on ranking enabler professionals and enabler companies

2029-2030

- Ratification of the UN Tax Convention and its protocols, participate in the COP
- UN beyond SDG Summit participation with a focus on SDG 16
- Assess progress in this strategic period and build a new strategy
